About the programme:

The Competition Commission has recently enforced a number of high-profile competition law cases at the Competition Tribunal. These include the first case based on substantial market power where personal liabilities and disqualification are being sought against the individual concerned. This highlights the need for increased awareness of competition law concerns. In this seminar, seasoned competition law practitioners will discuss the sensitivities relating to exchange of information with competitors and the following elements will be covered:

- The basic principles regarding anti-competitive information exchange
- Case studies
- Practical compliance tips
- Brief introduction on how anti-competitive conduct might be detected by an enforcement authority
